

Josh B's Portfolio

A presentation

Overview and Sitemap

- Landing page - Index.html
  - About.html: info page
    - Link to resume download
  - Contact.html: contact info
    - Links to Github and LinkedIn
  - Blog.html: blog page, links to blog posts
    - Blog posts 1-5

Tech Stack

Front End:

- HTML5
- XHTML
- CSS3
- Javascript

Back End

- Git - source control
- Github
- Github Pages

Resources:

- Unsplash
- Font Awesome 5
- W3 Schools

Design Plan

- Easy to navigate, not a struggle to find important links.
- Common theme across pages
- Simple, light colours and high contrast for easy readability
- Flexible layout for any screen size

Breakpoints

- 600px for tablets
- 440 for mobile

Simple design meant most screen sizes were easy to cater for.

Workflow:

1. Sitemap
2. Wireframes
3. Shared components
4. Specific components
5. fine-tuning

Components

Theme Components:

- Header
  - Incl: circle image which links back to home(intended to be a different image for each page)
- Navbar
  - Moves dynamically with screen size
- Footer
  - logo, icon links to Github and linkedIn

Specific components:

- Homepage Navigation buttons
- Thumbnails for blog posts
- Blog post header
- Internal link for longer pages to easily return to navbar

Home page: Wireframe

Design: Home Page

Header:

- Establishes which page the user is on with text

Navbar

- Located to be easy to find for quick navigation

Center

- Standout navigation buttons, background image for contrast and aesthetics

Footer

- Always at the bottom of the page, contains external links and small logo

Home page: index.html

About page: Wireframes

Design: About

- Contains some basic styled text info about my career, goals and hobbies.
White background for easy readability and attention grabbing.
- Link pdf file of Resume with pdf icon for design and easy to recognise

About page: about.html

Blog page: Wireframe

Design: Blog

- Thumbnail images to distinguish blog posts from each other.

Images themselves are links to blog posts with author and date at the bottom left of the image. The images will also go gray when hovered over to show they are links.

- The posts themselves are contained in their own scrollable area. No one likes to scroll to much.
- Internal link at the bottom of the page for quick access back to navbar

Blog page: blog.html

Blog post: Wireframe

Design: Blog Post

- Different styled header to distinguish from main webpages.
- The posts themselves are contained in their own scrollable area. No one likes to scroll to much.
- Simple white background for text for easy readability
- Image from thumbnails becomes header for blog post

Blog post: blog1.html

Blog One

Home | About | Blog | Contact

Eumæus' Tale (From The Odyssey, Book XV) By Homer

"There is an island over beyond Ortygia—perchance thou hast heard tell of it—where the sun turns. It is a goodly island, though not very vast, with rich herds and flocks, and much grain and wine. There is no dearth, and no illness visits poor mortals. When men grow old there, Apollo of the Silver Bow, in company with Artemis, comes to them and kills them gently with his shafts. On the island are two cities, which divide all the land between them. My father was king over all, Ctesius son of Ormenus, a godlike man.

"To this land came the Phœnicians, famous sailors greedy for merchandise, bringing many

Blog One

Home
About
Blog
Contact

Eumæus' Tale (From The Odyssey, Book XV) By Homer

"There is an island over beyond Ortygia—perchance thou hast heard tell of it—where the sun turns. It is a goodly island, though not very vast, with rich herds and flocks, and much grain and wine. There is no dearth, and no illness visits poor mortals. When men grow old there, Apollo of the Silver Bow, in company with Artemis, comes to them and kills them gently with his shafts. On the island are two cities, which divide all the land between them. My father was king over all, Ctesius son of Ormenus, a godlike man.

"To this land came the Phœnicians, famous sailors greedy for merchandise, bringing many things in their dark ship. There was in my father's palace a Phœnician woman, tall and lovely, and skillful in making beautiful things with her hands, her the Phœnicians deceived by their guile. As she was washing clothes near the hollow ship, one of them conquered her, love beguiles many women, even the noblest. The Phœnician asked her who she was and from what land, and she straightaway showed him the high palace of my father, and said, 'I come from Sidon, rich in bronze, and am the daughter of the wealthy Agyas. The Taphians, who are pirates, seized me as I was coming from the fields, brought me to this land, and sold me for a great price to my present master.' Then he who had conquered her said in answer, 'Wouldest thou return once more to thy home with us, to see again the high palace of thy father, and see thy mother? They are yet alive, and are reputed to be wealthy.'

"Then the woman made answer to him and said, 'This may be, if you sailors will swear to bring me home safely.' Thus she answered, and the sailors swore as she bade them, and after they had sworn, the woman spake to them: 'Say naught now, let none of you speak to me when you see me in the street, or even by the well, lest it be known and told to the old man here, and he suspect me and tie me fast and bring death to you all. But keep in mind the plan, and hasten to bring your freight for the homeward voyage. When your ship is full laden, send a messenger quickly to the palace for me, and I will bring gold: all I can lay hand upon. And there is more, besides, that I would bring with me: I am nursing a child for my master, a darling boy who runs about with me, I would bring him with me on the ship. He should bring a high price, if you sell him among men of other lands and other speech.'

"Thus she departed to the fair halls. But the sailors remained among us a while, and

Eumæus' Tale (From The Odyssey, Book XV) By Homer

"There is an island over beyond Ortygia—perchance thou hast heard tell of it—where the sun turns. It is a goodly island, though not very vast, with rich herds and flocks, and much grain and wine. There is no dearth, and no illness visits poor mortals. When men grow old there, Apollo of the Silver Bow, in company with Artemis, comes to them and kills them gently with his shafts. On the island are two cities, which divide all the land between them. My father was king over all, Ctesius son of Ormenus, a godlike man.

"To this land came the Phœnicians, famous sailors greedy for merchandise, bringing many things in their dark ship. There was in my father's palace a Phœnician woman, tall and lovely, and skillful in making beautiful things with her hands, her the Phœnicians deceived by their guile. As she was washing clothes near the hollow ship, one of them conquered her, love beguiles many women, even the noblest. The Phœnician asked her who she was and from what land, and she straightaway showed him the high palace of my father, and said, 'I come from Sidon, rich in bronze, and am the daughter of the wealthy Agyas. The Taphians, who are pirates, seized me as I was coming from the fields, brought me to this land, and sold me for a great price to my present master.' Then he who had conquered her said in answer, 'Wouldest thou return once more to thy home with us, to see again the high palace of thy father, and see thy mother? They are yet alive, and are reputed to be wealthy.'

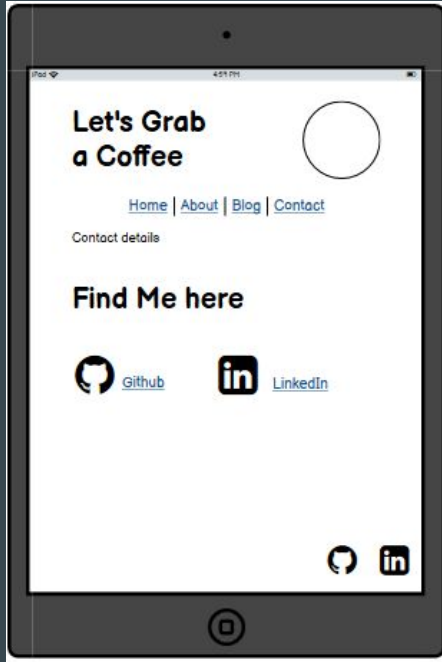

"Then the woman made answer to him and said, 'This may be, if you sailors will swear to bring me home safely.' Thus she answered, and the sailors swore as she bade them, and after they had sworn, the woman spake to them: 'Say naught now, let none of you speak to me when you see me in the street, or even by the well, lest it be known and told to the old man here, and he suspect me and tie me fast and bring death to you all. But keep in mind the plan, and hasten to bring your freight for the homeward voyage. When your ship is full laden, send a messenger quickly to the palace for me, and I will bring gold: all I can lay hand upon. And there is more, besides, that I would bring with me: I am nursing a child for my master, a darling boy who runs about with me, I would bring him with me on the ship. He should bring a high price, if you sell him among men of other lands and other speech.'

"Thus she departed to the fair halls. But the sailors remained among us a while year, and gathered great wealth for their hollow ship, and when it was laden and ready to sail, a messenger was sent to tell the woman. A crafty man with a golden and amber chair came to the halls of my father. My mother and the maidens in the palace were looking upon the chair and holding it, offering the man a price for it, while he made signs in silence to the woman. Then he betook himself to the hollow ship. The woman then took me by the hand and led me out of the house. At the doorway she found the eggs and tables of the guests who had feasted and waited upon their father. They had gone out to the meeting place where councils were held. And the women concealed these cups in her bosom, and carried them away, while I followed her innocently. The sun sank and darkness came. Going quickly, we reached the harbor and the swift ship of the Phœnicians; the sailors went aboard, taking us with them, and sailed over the ocean. Once giving us hasting wings, we sailed continuously day and night for six days, but when Zetes, son of Cronos, brought the seventh, Artemis the huntress shook down the women and the lad like a swallow to the bottom of the ship. The sailors threw her overboard, to the seals and the fishes, and I sorrowed. With the help of wind and waves they came to Ithaca, where Laertes brought me. It was thus that I lost belated this place.

Author: Homer

Back To Top

Contact Info: Wireframe

Design: Contact

- Contact info for direct contact
- Large icons for easy to find links to other work and information

Contact Info: contact.html

Challenges

- Learning as I go
- Dealing with time constraints
- Finding work-arounds when things didn't go as planned
- Flex

Highlights

- Everytime something worked first go
- Troubleshooting issues successfully
- Seeing how my code changed over time
- Fun
- Great to have a finished product

Thank You!